

Good Afternoon,

My name is Daniel Buchner, and I am a student at Georgetown Law Center. I have been following the events surrounding the decision on Monday and I can imagine that your office must be very strained at this point.

Though I do not wish at all to increase the already heavy load that you must have on your shoulders, I would like to ask what should be some quick questions that I hope you might be able to answer without much research at all.

First of all, I have read many articles in the newspapers that have passages like:

"the nation's broad casters have been able to press their views personally in over 70 face-to-face meetings."

and

"Mr. Wiley and his partners have held at least 34 meetings with FCC officials"

Where do they get these numbers? Does your office keep a log of all the meetings that you have? I don't necessarily mean a log with everything that you have discussed, but just a log of all the meetings that take place?

If so, how can I get that log (other than going through FOIA)?

Second of all, assuming that you do keep such a log, do you happen to know what regulation requires that log to be kept?

I would really appreciate answers to these questions though I am sure you are incredibly busy. Please let me know as soon as you can. Have a wonderful day.

Take Care

Daniel
